

Classified Ventures Selects CoreSite to Support Growth

March 20, 2014

DENVER--(BUSINESS WIRE)--Mar. 20, 2014-- CoreSite Realty Corporation (NYSE: COR), a provider of secure, reliable, high-performance data center solutions, today announced that Classified Ventures, LLC, the owner and operator of national online classified ad site, Cars.com, has selected CoreSite's "CH1" data center in Chicago, Ill., to deploy infrastructure delivering applications to support mission-critical data analytics and customer-facing web services.

CoreSite's data center addresses Classified Ventures requirements relating to scalability, network performance and physical security. The data center affords Classified Ventures connectivity options to more than 80 customers, including 50+ network, IT and cloud service providers and 30+ enterprises.

"Our operations rely heavily on mission-critical infrastructure and CoreSite offers the solutions we need for continued growth," said Jason O'Sullivan, vice president of Corporate Technology at Classified Ventures. "Apart from the physical infrastructure, we were extremely pleased with the customer experience — a true serve-the-customer approach, which helped us make the clear choice to partner with CoreSite for our mission-critical data center needs."

Classified Ventures' technology systems require high-density and high-performance data center capacity and services. The deployment within CoreSite's facility, CH1, gives Classified Ventures the ability to develop and support current business applications and scale to support future needs.

"Classified Ventures selection of CoreSite enables the enterprise by providing reliable and secure network-dense, cloud-enabled data center solutions coupled with a first-class customer experience," said Matt Muell, VP and general manager at CoreSite. "By leveraging our established community of network and cloud providers serving CH1, Classified Ventures is well-positioned for continued growth and evolution of their products and services."

Located in downtown Chicago, the CH1 facility spans 183,000 square-feet. CoreSite has owned and operated the facility since 2007. Under its ownership, CoreSite has developed more than 80,000 square feet of new, enterprise-class data center capacity and retains additional space to develop further capacity to support customer growth requirements. Additionally, at the facility CoreSite has created a vibrant ecosystem of network and cloud customers supporting enterprise requirements for performance underpinned by industry-leading reliability, security and service.
